

Beer Brand / Keg Taps Couplers Listing

This listing is for US domestically distributed kegs. Always verify with your local distributor the cooperage (keg and valve system) for the beer you intend to dispense.

Keg Tap Info

The new "single valve" keg couplers are simple and easy to use. Attach coupler to keg, depress handle to engage, pressure is allowed to enter the keg and beer is pushed out. Most couplers have a built-in PRV (pressure relief valve) to allow over-pressurized (55 PSI) gas to escape before it enters the keg.

Pressure Inlet - Attach RED 5/16" I.D. gas hose to the exposed 5/16" I.D. inlet nipple. Clamp it securely to prevent gas leaks.

Beer Outlet - Attach CLEAR beer line fittings to the threads on the beer outlet. Use a hex nut (874), tailpiece (usually 3/16" I.D. 526A) and seal it with a neoprene washer (759) under the hex nut.

Care & Cleaning - Always inspect the coupler before tapping a new keg. Check the bottom seal washer (where the coupler connects to the keg) for cracks, chips, or wear. A worn bottom seal will allow gas to escape, and air to be drawn in resulting in foamy beer being dispensed.

It is a good practice to clean the beer line and fittings between each keg. If the handle action is sticky and the coupler is difficult to engage - it probably needs a good cleaning. Disassemble the coupler, clean and then lightly re-lube (FT101L) the probe for easier action. Proper beer dispensing depends on the keg coupler functioning correctly.

D System Keg Coupler D System

D System Most common system available in the US, also known as American Sankey. Used by all the major breweries - Anheuser-Busch, Miller, Molson-Coors, and Labatt as well as most craft breweries.

A System Keg Coupler A System

A System Commonly referred to as the German Slider because it slides onto the valve face. Used by breweries such as - Hoegaarden, Paulaner, Spaten, and Warsteiner.

S System Keg Coupler    S System

S System Many European breweries use this system, also known as European Sankey. Distinguished by its longer, narrower probe than the D System. Used by breweries such as - Heineken, Becks, Amstel Light, and Pilsner Urquell.

M System Keg Coupler    M System

M System Recently introduced to the U.S. market. Body is the same as the German Slider, but the probe configuration is unique. Used by breweries such as - Schneider, Aventinus, and Einbecker.

G System Keg Coupler    G System

G System This system gets its name from the English developer, Grundy. The valve face can be thought of as a circle with three sides cut off. Used by breweries such as - Bass, Boddington's, Caffrey's and Anchor Steam (50 liter kegs)

U System Keg Coupler    U System

U System This system takes its name from the English manufacturer UEC. Used by breweries such as - Guinness and Harp.

Twin Probe Coupler

Twin Probe This system is in limited use by some regional craft breweries.

We at Advanced Beverage Solutions do try to maintain a database of brands of draft beer and the system of valve they use in their kegs. But, as there are literally tens of thousands of breweries and brands of beer available it's simply not possible to maintain a listing of every brand of beer.

For those brands of beer not covered in our listing, we recommend simply inquiring about the system of keg coupler with the company you are purchasing your kegs from. If they do not know, they can make a quick call to the beer distributor or brewery to find out this information for you.
